

honorary medical officer to the Norwood and District Hospital, medical officer to the Post Office, and surgeon to the Norwood and Crystal Palace division of the St. John Ambulance Brigade. He was also the chairman of a Ministry of Labour and National Service medical board at Croydon. His interest in the Navy, encouraged by service in the R.N.V.R. in the first world war, was maintained to the end of his life, and in 1942 he was awarded the R.N.V.R. Officers' Decoration. During the second world war he served in various R.N. hospitals and ships from October, 1939, until April, 1946, with the rank of surgeon commander. He leaves a widow.

Dr. ELIZABETH A. NETTELL writes : As a former patient, colleague, and later a friend of Dr. JOYCE PARTRIDGE, may I add a few words to her obituary notice (Journal, May 26, p. 1244) ? Joyce was indeed a worth-while person, and everything she did was done with enthusiasm, whether it was coping with a swarm of bees in a seemingly inaccessible spot, watching a play by our local repertory company, or tackling a tricky piece of analysis with a patient. She was always calm, she was never hurried, and her wisdom besides being academic was that of the wise old folk of the country. To her, death was just part of God's pattern, not to be feared, not to be dreaded. When the fruit was ripe it was ready to fall. Towards the end she was a very sick woman, and though often desperately tired she did not give in and coped with her house, wrote letters, and saw patients up to the day before her death. Joyce died on holiday in Switzerland. Her friends who had come to meet her at the station thought she looked ill, but the Swiss porter said, "That lady is not ill. She was laughing and chatting to the others a few minutes ago." Yet when they reached her she was dead. But that was Joyce Partridge. She laughed, she chatted, and she died. She has gone, but the wisdom and love which she carried within herself will live on to a small degree at any rate in the lives of those she served and befriended.

The death occurred in Turin on May 17 of Dr. GIULIO CASALINI at the age of 80. Giulio Casalini was born in Vigevano in 1876, and graduated in medicine in 1893. His interests lay in the field of social medicine, and he edited several popular magazines, including L'Igiene e la Vita. An active political figure in the days before the Fascist regime, he was one of the leaders of the Italian Socialist movement, being five times elected to the Italian Chamber of Deputies. He was vice-president of that Chamber in 1921. After Mussolini came to power he retired from politics and returned to the practice of medicine. He was medical adviser to the city council of Turin and for more than thirty years director of the Istituto Madri e Lattanti in that city.
