On February 1, 1956, a married woman was admitted to the New European Hospital, Nairobi, in a state of collapse with internal haemorrhage. After the injection of three pints (1.7 litres) of saline and artificial plasma in 10 minutes and six and a half pints (3.7 litres) of blood within an hour and a half she was regarded by the surgeon as "just becoming an operation risk," and it was decided that immediate operation was essential to stop the haemorrhage which was killing her. Although she was taken to the theatre it was considered too dangerous to remove her from bed to the operating table. But although the operation was one of grave emergency the surgeon had the assistance of a full

On making a mid-line incision the surgeon found the abdominal cavity full of blood. Placing his hand deep into the pelvis he felt that the left corner of the uterus had burst. He seized this, which was the bleeding point, and held it firm between his finger and thumb to control further bleeding. Bleeding in fact stopped within 30 seconds, and during the rest of the operation the patient's general condition began slightly to improve. Some four pints (2.3 litres) of blood were sucked out of the abdominal cavity into auto-transfusion bottles, and two to three pints more (1.1-1.7 litres) were removed with mopping packs, which had no tapes attached and of which the surgeon and his assistant never released hold. Some 17 of these were used.

In order to keep the field of work clear while sewing up the ruptured part the surgeon used two or three packs, with tapes and Spencer Wells forceps attached, to pack back the intestines.

When he had finished, the surgeon said that, having checked that the pelvic cavity was clear, he removed the packing swabs and checked carefully the area involved, removing considerable quantities of blood that were oozing down from the upper parts of the abdomen. When he was sure he had done all he could do in the way of routine checking for packs and had been told by the theatre sister that the swab count was correct he sewed up.

In October, 1956, after a history of vomiting and abdominal pain starting from at least as early as April 23, 1956, the patient was operated upon by another surgeon for intestinal obstruction. This was found to be caused by the presence of what was at once recognized as an abdominal pack.

The patient brought an action against the first surgeon and the Kenya European Hospital Association, as the managing body of the New European Hospital, alleging that the pack then found was left in her abdomen during the previous operation by reason of negligence on the part of the surgeon and the theatre staff, for whom the Association was vicariously responsible.

Judgment

The action was tried by Mr. Justice Miles, who, in his judgment given on February 17, 1958, held that the swab had been left behind during the emergency operation. He further held that, although the operation was an emergency, there was nothing in the circumstances to relieve the theatre staff from responsibility for the failure to carry out an accurate swab count. The surgeon in his description of this operation had himself excluded the existence of all the conditions which might reasonably excuse a surgeon from overlooking a pack, and it seemed to the judge that in fact he was "convicted of negligence out of his own mouth."

The result was that, although the operation, which had been extremely difficult and hazardous and which was executed as a brilliant piece of surgery, was completely successful and saved the patient's life, both the surgeon and the hospital authority were liable for the suffering and damage which had been caused by the fact that the swab was overlooked. As the judge observed, it was unfortunate that an isolated lapse from the high standard of care which it was clear from the evidence normally prevailed at the New European Hospital should have such serious consequences.

Circumstances that Might Excuse a Surgeon

If the patient's condition during the operation had deteriorated so that the surgeon had had to bring it to a conclusion in conditions which remained those of emergency, and he had relied on the swab count, and cut short his own physical check, it may well be that the judge would have held him justified in relying on the count which he was told by the theatre sister was correct. There must be circumstances in which the urgency of sewing up is so great that the surgeon is entitled to take the risk that the swab count is wrong, even though the fallibility of what ought to be a certain safeguard has been shown over and over again. But the more often swab counts are shown to be fallible the more desperate must be the situation in which it is reasonable for the surgeon to rely on the count rather than on his own search. Ultimately it all comes back to the familiar question, Was the surgeon's conduct reasonable acording to the standards of the ordinarily good and careful practitioner having regard to the whole circumstances of the case? And this standard is set not by the courts, which have to rely on the expert evidence that is called, but by the conscience of the profession itself.
