

Obituary

GRANTLY DICK-READ, M.D.

Dr. Grantly Dick-Read, who died in Norfolk on June 11, aged 69, was well known in Britain and many countries overseas for his pertinacious and enthusiastic advocacy of "natural childbirth." His views, and the ways he expressed them, gave rise to controversy, but the soundness of many of the principles on which he based his teaching was not in question.

Grantly Dick-Read (he changed his name to Dick-Read last year) was born on January 26, 1890, the son of a Norfolk miller and the sixth of seven children. He was educated at Bishop's Stortford College and St. John's College, Cambridge. A keen athlete, boxer, and games player, he played association football for the university on occasions and was a member of the Hawks Club and of the Incogniti and Cryptics cricket clubs. Going on to the London Hospital for his clinical training, he graduated B.Ch. in 1914 and joined the R.A.M.C. very shortly afterwards on the outbreak of the first world war. He served first in Gallipoli, where he was wounded, and later in France, first as medical officer to the 5th Dragoon Guards and later as D.A.D.M.S. to the Indian Cavalry Corps. At the end of the war he returned to the London Hospital as resident accoucheur, and in 1920 he proceeded to the M.D. of Cambridge University.

After a short spell in general practice in Eastbourne he went into a partnership in Woking, where he remained for many years. There he was able to develop his special interest in obstetrics and to work out his views on childbirth. His reputation grew and he took rooms in Harley Street. The general-practice partnership in Woking was dissolved in 1934, and after that he practised obstetrics independently, working in his own private clinic in Woking. At this time he began to write extensively on "natural childbirth" and to give lectures on the subject. Later, after the second world war, he undertook a lecture tour in the U.S.A. and he also lectured in Paris. Finding he could not practise in England to his satisfaction after the Health Service came into being in 1948, he went out to South Africa, and after a struggle with the South African Medical and Dental Council and surmounting other difficulties he established a practice in Johannesburg. He returned to live in England in 1953, but by then he had given up active practice and devoted his time to lecturing and writing.

Dr. Dick-Read was twice married. He first married Dorothea Cannon in 1921 and they had two sons and two daughters. In 1952 he married Mrs. Jessica Bennett.

A colleague writes: Grantly Dick-Read evolved his theory of natural childbirth as a result of careful study of the process of childbirth. According to him the event which led to the development of his theories took place in Whitechapel in 1914. There he tried to give chloroform to a woman in labour. She refused, gently but firmly, and when it was over she remarked, "It didn't hurt, doctor. It wasn't meant to hurt, was it?" During the years which followed this question must have been in his mind. His first important publication was Natural Childbirth (1933). Here he stated his belief that normal childbirth should be a painless process and that pain arises from fear and tension. If these were abolished, he maintained, the pain of labour could be largely eliminated. Much of his early work was based on Jacobson's book on relaxation published in 1929. As a result of this a planned method of natural childbirth was evolved based partly on the practice of muscular relaxation and partly on antenatal exercises.

Natural Childbirth was followed by other books: Revelation of Childbirth (1943), Childbirth Without Fear (1944), Birth of a Child (1947), Introduction to Motherhood (1950), and No Time for Fear (1955). Among the articles he published in medical journals was one in this Journal—the substance of a lecture he gave in 1949 on "The Discomforts of Childbirth." He also made a film to illustrate his method of conducting labour, and he was well known as a broadcaster.

His work was taken up by many in Britain, and he received the support of some leading obstetricians. The late Helen Heardman, a physiotherapist, was greatly attracted by Dick-Read's views, and she was instrumental in starting classes for expectant mothers in many centres. Dick-Read's methods have also been practised, with modifications, in many countries, notably by H. Thoms at the Yale University clinic in the U.S.A. The Russians have evolved a "psychoprophylactic" method, also practised in France, which has some differences from that originally described by Dick-Read but which resembles it in many respects. The extent of his achievement is thus to be seen all over the world, for his work has had a great popular appeal.

He himself often felt that his work was not appreciated by his medical colleagues and that his own profession was slow to recognize his contribution. Certainly at the time of his first publications there was much room for improvement of the maternity services, in the conduct of labour, and in the attitude of obstetricians and midwives to the act of childbirth. His ideas were a complete reaction against "twilight sleep" and the excessive practice of operative delivery. He encouraged the mother to enjoy her delivery in complete consciousness of the event. On the other hand, many of his views were misunderstood and misinterpreted. He was not against analgesia in obstetrics, and indeed often said that analgesia should always be available and offered where needed. But he contended that a confident and adequately prepared woman experiencing a normal birth should need only minimal relief.

Grantly Dick-Read was a man of striking appearance and handsome presence. He was a brilliant speaker, expounding his views with single-minded enthusiasm which carried his audience with him. In private life he was very gay and excellent company, and he enjoyed the good things of life. His contribution to the art of obstetrics was a unique one—one which could probably have been made by no one else and made only by one who was prepared to rebel against the established order. We extend to his widow and family our sympathy at the passing of one who devoted his life to a single cause, but one of the highest importance.
