Adventurous Life

I Swear by Apollo. . . The Life of a Doctor. By P. T. Regester, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., D.P.H. (Pp. 132; illustrated. 15s.) Reading: Educational Explorers Limited. 1964.

This book, which is one of the "Life and Work" series, is by a doctor who began his career as a seaman and continued it in the Royal Air Force during the 1939-45 war, during which he had to bale out over enemy territory and was taken prisoner. When the war was over he continued his studies at the London Hospital and qualified in 1951. Since then he has had experience of general practice in Lincolnshire, and is now a medical officer of health. But in between for a time he did medical work in the primitive interior of Borneo, and this so impressed him that he devotes his opening chapter to a description of it.

His adventurous life qualifies him to give useful information and advice to the novice, and this he does in many places, but, being something of a philosopher and poet, he tends to bring in flights of fancy and discussions on philosophical problems that are not so likely to encourage the young would-be medical student. Thus he queries: "What is, what was youth? A flash of sunshine on the tide-race, a vagrant image, an illusion? An effervescence, a delusion, a lie pranked out in the glad rags of romance?" That piece of fine writing would not help the student so much as the plain statement that occurs in the same chapter: "the embryo doctor may take heart, for there is no profession that flings so wide so many doors of opportunity for the adventurous spirit." That is splendid encouragement. He wisely insists on a high ethical standard in the profession and supports the modern restatement of the Hippocratic Oath—the Geneva Declaration—which is included in an appendix. The rather unusual illustrations are from sketches by the author.
