

years of notably high rates, 7928 cases being notified (a figure, however, that is likely to be lower than the actual number of cases). Nevertheless, the general picture is not encouraging, the report points out, since the numbers of notifications during 1975-7 have been the highest since 1959. Isolations of Salmonella typhimurium and several other common salmonellae decreased; but there was a sharp increase in isolations of S hadar, which is commonly associated with turkeys.
