LIVERPOOL.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE most noteworthy event in our medical world since my last communication, is an operation at the Royal Infirmary; namely, the successful deligation of the common iliac for aneurism, by Mr. Bickersteth, on the 4th of March. The patient, a boiler-maker, aged 39, had complained for several weeks of uneasiness in the right lower extremity, which had latterly increased to severe pain, rendering him quite unable to follow his occupation. There was no indication of any other arterial disease. The tumour occupied a space extending from an inch and a half below Poupart's ligament to within two inches of the umbilicus, on the right side. The pulsation and impulse were very distinct. The mode of operating was somewhat similar to that recommended by Sir Astley Cooper. A vertical incision, about five inches in length, commencing at a point one inch above and three inches to the outer side of the umbilicus, was carried downwards over the tumour, and all the structures were divided down to the surface of the peritoneum; then, with a probe-pointed bistoury and with the fingers in the wound, the peritoneum was carefully separated from the fascia transversalis and from the surface of the tumour, laying bare the sheath of the common iliac; the edges of the wound being held apart with copper spatulæ, the sheath of the vessel was seized with forceps, and opened to the extent of a quarter of an inch; an armed aneurism-needle was then passed below the artery, between it and the vein, and the vessel tied. The operation was accomplished quickly and without any apparent difficulty, and there was no bleeding of any consequence. The aneurism arose from the external iliac, and the common iliac artery was displaced, and rested upon the upper and inner surface of the tumour. It was ovoid in form, of about the size of a small cocoa-nut. The subsequent progress of the case was most favourable. The day after the operation, the tumour had become firm and solid, the foot was warm, and the strong pulsation of the epigastric and other small arteries indicated the early establishment of the collateral circulation. The ligature came away on April 6th, the thirty-third day after the operation; and on my visit to the hospital on the 15th, I found the patient able to walk about the ward, apparently quite recovered. The remains of the aneurism can be felt as a hard tumour of considerable size, in the lower part of the right side of the belly.

In an adjoining bed lies a man whose case has afforded much interest to those who have watched its progress. This patient, an individual of robust frame and healthy aspect, was admitted with symptoms of pyæmia, having suffered, shortly before, from whitlow of severe character in the palm of one hand, followed a week or two afterwards by pain of great severity in the left hip behind the trochanter, extending down the thigh in the course of the sciatic nerve. Under the use of alcoholic stimulants, and quinine and opium in full doses, he was apparently recovering; when, having now been in the hospital for a few weeks, he became suddenly worse, was seized with rigors, profuse sweating, loss of appetite, anxiety of countenance, and other indications of serious constitutional disturbance; followed by swelling of the entire left lower extremity from the hip to the foot, which rapidly increased, until the limb was considerably enlarged, and presented precisely the appearance of the affection so well known in the lying-in chamber as phlegmasia dolens. For a time, it was supposed that deep-seated formation of matter had taken place; and the urgency of the constitutional symptoms rendered the prospect somewhat uncertain as to the result. The application of flannel bandages to the limb and appropriate general treatment have, however, so far gradually improved the patient's condition, both locally and generally, that he now presents every appearance of a favourable convalescence. The cause of the pyæmia in this case was not very evident; the man attributed his illness to some poison imbibed into his system while employed in stripping the copper from a ship's bottom, but it did not appear that he sustained any wound or other local injury while thus occupied. Mr. Bickersteth, whose patient he is, was of opinion that the pyæmia had arisen spontaneously, or, at any rate, independently of any wound or injury.

On the same day that the common iliac was tied,

SANITARY. A deputation from the Metropolitan Association of Medical Officers of Health had an interview with Viscount Palmerston on Monday last, on the importance of sanitary supervision of public schools.

ROYAL SOCIETY. Of the fifteen candidates this year nominated by the Council of the Royal Society for election, three are members of the medical profession, viz.: Professor Rolleston of Oxford, Dr. Hicks of Guy's Hospital, and Mr. Teale of Leeds.

VACANCIES. The following appointments are vacant: professor of clinical medicine at University College; surgeon to the Chester Infirmary; resident medical officer to the General Hospital and Dispensary for Children, Manchester; resident medical officer to the Guildford and West Surrey Dispensary; house-surgeon to the Birmingham and Midland Eye Hospital; assistant house-surgeon to the Infirmary and Dispensary, Bradford, Yorkshire; poor-law medical officer for the Lowestoft district of the Mutford and Lothingland Incorporation.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON. On the 3rd inst., the resignation by Dr. Walshe of the offices of professor of the principles and practice of medicine and of physician to the hospital was accepted, with expressions of regret. Dr. Jenner was appointed to those offices. He retires from the special professorship of clinical medicine at the hospital. That office to which a physicianship at the hospital is attached, is consequently now vacant, and open for the application of candidates.

SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION. A deputation from the Council of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science had an interview with Viscount Palmerston last week, on the subject of quarantine regulations. The deputation consisted of Lord Talbot de Malahide, President of the Public Health Department; Mr. Stephen Cave, M.P.; Mr. G. W. Hastings, general secretary of the association; Dr. Lankester and Dr. Milroy, secretaries of the Public Health Department; and Dr. Waller Lewis.

PRINCE CONSORT TESTIMONIAL. At a late meeting at the Mansion House, Dublin, it was announced that the College of Surgeons and the Apothecaries' Hall of Dublin had respectively contributed £50 and £20 to the Prince Consort Testimonial. Dr. Corrigan stated that he was authorised by the College of Physicians to express their deep regret that, owing to the stringency of the act of parliament which ruled the distribution of their trust funds, they were debarred from officially subscribing to an object of so much interest, but that they were actively engaged at present in receiving personal contributions from the Fellows and members of their body.

EMIGRANTS' TESTIMONIAL TO A SURGEON. The Government emigrant ship John Vanner, which sailed from Southampton on the 4th of January last, arrived at Table Bay, Cape of Good Hope, on the 10th of March, with two hundred and thirty-eight emigrants on board under the charge of Surgeon Superintendent William Domett Stone. Notwithstanding that between thirty and forty adults and children were struck down with scarlet fever and measles, it is gratifying to add that Mr. Stone only lost one patient, an infant of 9 months. So grateful were the poor Irish to this gentleman for his attention to their several wants, that, with characteristic generosity, they subscribed from their limited means to present him with a silver mug and a very flattering address, which appears in full in the South African Mail, from which we obtain the above information. The recipient of this testimonial is the son of an old servant of the profession, Mr. Stone of the Royal College of Surgeons.

A GENUINE BRITISH COMPOSITION. Who is responsible for the following insult to Lindley Murray and John Hunter, tableted in Westminster Abbey?—"Beneath are deposited the remains of John Hunter, born at Long Calderwood, Lancashire, N.B., on the 14th of February, 1728; died in London on the 10th of October, 1793. His remains were removed from the church of St. Martin's-in-the-fields to this abbey on the 28th of March, 1859. The Royal College of Surgeons of England have placed this tablet over the grave of Hunter to record their admiration of his genius as a gifted interpreter of the Divine power and wisdom that works in the laws of organic life, and their grateful veneration for his services to mankind as the father of scientific surgery." Which of the College authorities is father of this precious production?

THE JAPANESE AMBASSADORS. On Saturday afternoon, Dr. Mitukury and Dr. Matski-ko-an, accompanied by Otah, an officer of the Embassy, paid a second visit to King's College Hospital. They were received by Mr. W. H. Smith, the Chairman, Mr. Fergusson, etc., and afterwards proceeded to the operating theatre, which was unusually crowded. Among the visitors were Dr. Despine, Dr. Duchenne, Sir Joseph Olliffe, and others. The Japanese occupied the reserved seats, and seemed to take a deep interest in the proceedings of the hospital staff. Several important operations were performed under the influence of chloroform by Mr. Fergusson and Mr. Bowman. The visitors from Japan, after witnessing all the operations, and expressing themselves much gratified with their visit, left for the purpose of paying a visit to the British Museum. They evinced their gratification at the attention shown to them by the hospital staff by presents of pipes, specimens of coins, china, drawings, and autographs, receiving in return the carte de visite and autographs of the medical men.

ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES. This hospital, founded in 1854, has been of inestimable service. It has supplemented the elder establishments, and has frequently relieved their officers from the pain of sending helplessly away, to certain want and increased suffering, incurable patients who most need and most appreciate the care and comforts of a hospital. At the anniversary dinner of this institution, Lord Dufferin, in an eloquent speech, dwelt on the peculiar claims of the charity to support. The effect of his speech upon the audience was unmistakable. A list of subscriptions, amounting to nearly £2,000, and which included a donation of five guineas from the Poet Laureate, was read. We are informed that the inmates at present number nearly a hundred, and that sixty-five out patients, having homes of their own, receive an annual allowance of £20, besides medical attendance.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON. On Monday afternoon the students belonging to the Faculty of Medicine in University College, who had been successful in the various competitions, received their prizes and honours from the hands of the Right Hon. F. W. Cowper, M.P., in the theatre of the Institution.
