

However, books on osteopathy are a mixed blessing to the would-be medical manipulator. Osteopaths manipulate without adequate traction, thus losing the advantage of a strong centripetal force acting on the articular contents. In consequence they are driven to adopt a welter of complicated manœuvres, when much simpler measures carried out during traction would have sufficed. For example, Maigne needs no fewer than 58 photographs and diagrams to demonstrate the different ways of moving the cervical joints.

The other disadvantage of books based on osteopathy is the vague way the clinical examination is conducted. Some spinal movements are tested, tender points are palpated—and the manipulator is all set. It seems to me that osteopaths, even when medically qualified, cast their net far too wide. It is not enough to find limited movement at a spinal joint; the relevance of this finding to the patient's complaint needs to be established. This book includes a tendentious section by Lescure on the possible visceral effects of manipulation. He does not consider the view that, when "coronary thrombosis" or a "grumbling appendix" is relieved by manipulation, he is dealing with misdiagnosis, and that in fact a root-pain caused by a thoracic disk-lesion has been relieved. This book, then, can be commended as an atlas of manipulative technique, but will command little agreement on its theoretical or clinical aspect.

to psychiatric examination by prison medical officers, and the facts so obtained were supplied to the Director of Public Prosecutions. He asked the Home Secretary to give instructions that no psychiatric examination of an accused person charged with murder should take place, and no report be given to the Director of Public Prosecutions, except with the consent of the accused or his legal advisers. Mr. BUTLER answered that it had for long been the established practice for a report on the mental condition of any prisoner charged with murder to be furnished by the prison medical officer to the court through the Director of Public Prosecutions, who supplied a copy to the defence. The Royal Commission on Capital Punishment approved this practice, but recommended that such prisoners should in future be examined by an independent psychiatrist of standing as well as by an experienced member of the prison medical service. The Government accepted this recommendation. Mr. Butler saw no reason to disturb the existing arrangements, which have been generally accepted as being necessary and desirable in the interests of justice.

Poliomyelitis in Scotland

Dr. J. DICKSON MABON (Greenock, Lab.) asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on December 6 how many persons over 25 years of age had contracted poliomyelitis in Scotland during 1959, and to the nearest convenient date in 1960; how many of these cases were of the paralytic form; and how many persons died from poliomyelitis. Mr. J. S. MACLAY stated that in 1959 in Scotland there were four accepted notifications of poliomyelitis in persons aged 25 and over, all of them of the paralytic form. In 1960, up to November 26, there were two notifications of poliomyelitis in the same age-group; one of these was of paralytic form. Three deaths from poliomyelitis took place in 1959, two being of persons aged 25 and over; no deaths had occurred this year up to September 30.
