SOCIAL SCIENCE IN BRUSSELS. The International Association for the Promotion of Social Science held its first sitting in Brussels on Tuesday. It was presided over by Mr. Fontainas, burgomaster of the city. A great number of distinguished persons from all parts of Europe were present, and the Duke of Brabant manifested his interest in the objects of the association by taking his place in the meeting. The President opened the proceedings by delivering a short address of welcome to "the statesmen, savans, artists, and poets," who had come from distant parts to bear their share in the common work. "Begin then, gentlemen," he said; "nothing here will restrain the free manifestation of your thought. Free men on a free soil, have no care for aught except your conscience and the truth; these alone will protect the dignity and propriety of the discussions about to commence." This sentence of the address was greeted with loud plaudits. M. August Couvreur then read a lengthy exposition of the origin, aims, and means of the association, showing that the first was due to English example, and that liberty is the instrument with which it is hoped to achieve progress.
