

isolated dressings of Callender. I say that the results were roughly satisfactory, because we saw a well-healed stump; a satisfactory case of removal of foreign body from the knee-joint, in which the joint had been largely opened; and a case of resection of the elbow-joint, which had been performed by M. Marchand, and in which the parts had been badly crushed, and which, although profusely suppurating, was in a fair way of healing. These cases were all satisfactory: M. Guérin appeared even to consider them exceptional; they are not, however, exceptional, in ordinary experience, in any other hospitals in Europe. They all stank more or less: the odour, according to this eminent surgeon, was that of "stinking cheese"; and it resembled indeed, in the slighter cases, some of those highly odorous cheeses of France and Germany, which are, in fact, forms of putrefying casein and albumen. The putrefactive process was apparently modified in most cases, but in some cases the stench was disgusting. That the firm equal pressure of the cotton-wool, the preliminary carbolic impregnation of the surface, and the filtration of air, exercised an excellent influence, in preventing multiple abscesses, œdema, purulent collections, and in tending, in most cases, to arrest extensive decomposition, was evident; and herein lie the frequent advantages and relative safety of the method.

Of the feebleness of the method, and the loopholes of infection which it leaves, of its total inapplicability to a multitude of injuries other than those of the limbs, there was evidence in the wards. One case was of gunshot-wound of the walls of the chest, with penetration of the pleura and (?) of the lung. Here the cotton-wool dressing was impossible, or at least wholly ineffectual. There was an immense collection of stinking pus, no counter-opening, and the general condition, both as to mode of dressing and results, such as it is impossible to approve, and undesirable to criticise. Here would have been a triumph of Lister's or of Callender's method; and the crude simplicity and want of resource of the pansement ouaté is as painfully apparent.

It is most unfortunate that the surgical statistics of a French hospital are not confided to a surgical registrar, as in English hospitals, whose duty it is to register, with unalterable impartiality, all cases admitted, and their precise result. The clinical records of the hospitals have no continuity and no permanence. Successive house-surgeons preserve notes, of which the numerical completeness is often contested, and which evidently, in the succession of movable officers and flying sheets, leave room for many lapses and unavoidable accidents of omission. Hence the statistic of M. Guérin, although it is undoubtedly favourable, and must needs show better results than that of the majority of French surgical wards, has not been allowed to pass without reproach. But, apart from statistics, it is easy for any unprejudiced observer to see that, with many merits, and based upon a scientific principle, which is probably now secure from serious contest, the method is yet imperfect, of limited application, and far from being uniform in its merits, or sufficiently elastic to be more than an occasional resource.

In one case, the bandages were saturated with filthy discharge. This case we did not see unbanded, as it occurred at the end of a long visit; in another, the method was altogether inapplicable, and, in others, there was too abundant and far from inoffensive purulent secretion. Moreover, if I may be permitted the observation, neither the surgeon nor his assistants appeared to be sufficiently impressed with the principle on which the system reposest—that of isolation from dirt. The "surgical finger", which has carried poison to so many wounds, was passed frequently into wounds, one after the other. The instruments used were not systematically purified, and there was a certain indifference to the minute details of cleanliness, by which the transference of contagious particles may be prevented, which betrayed imperfect conviction.

I have ventured to speak quite frankly and openly on this subject. I have been honoured by the friendship of two generations of surgeons and physicians of the school of Paris, and I have frequently done justice to their large learning; their intelligent and perfect appreciation of the anatomical and operative rules of art; their power of defining and contrasting the clinical features of disease; and their operative skill. In all these qualities, M. Guérin is well known to be equal to the best traditions of his school. In activity of mind and in the quickness with which he has seized and applied a fertile principle in surgical therapeutics (that of the filtration of the air around a wound) M. Guérin has undoubtedly rendered a service to his patients and to his art. But where he sees perfection it is hard for others to see more than a primitive essay; and where he sees finality, I can recognise only the commencement of progress.

SCIENCE PRIMERS.

SIR.—Many of your readers will know one or more intending students of medicine, and will be consulted by them upon various points connected with their future career. Will you allow me to suggest that by counselling a preliminary study of the science primers, especially those upon chemistry and physiology, during the next few weeks, they will be doing such students a very real service? It is well known that, for want of an outline-knowledge of those subjects (and of anatomy), and because he has never had his attention drawn to the simplest facts connected with them, many a student passes his first year in a state of utter confusion and bewilderment.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, A LECTURER.

THE following communications have been handed to the General Manager:—Mr. A. C. MacLachlan, Bath (with inclosure); Mr. R. G. Griffiths, Toonda, India; Mr. G. E. Stanger, Nottingham; Messrs. Field and Sons, Leamington; Mr. Thos. Hastie, Lincoln; Mr. Joseph Lewis, Birmingham; Messrs. W. Muller and Co., London; Dr. H. G. Lee, Thame; Mr. C. J. Wright, Leeds; Mr. T. W. Fox, Stevenage; Mr. G. Graham, Wimborne; Mr. C. E. Abbott, Stafford; Dr. A. M. Buchanan, Glasgow; Mr. Whiteley, Leeds.

HOLIDAY EXCHANGE OF DUTIES.

SIR.—As the disclosure of a want is almost certain to meet with a response, I this week venture to insert mine by advertisement in the JOURNAL. My practice is not so exhausting as to entitle me to an annual holiday either by taking my wife and family to the seaside or on the more expensive tour; at the same time, I feel as much as any the need of change of scene with change of air. At this season, I doubt not that many general practitioners are, like myself, almost if not quite idle; and some may feel, as I do, the responsibility and great expense of leaving a small practice in the hands of a qualified locum tenens. There are many, perhaps, wearied rather than exhausted, who do not sigh for greater leisure, yet would feel a new zest in life in crossing other hills and looking into other faces. I hate the seaside lodging and the strange bed each night at some new inn, and I count the cost. Cannot some brother practitioner offer me what I offer him—the comforts of home, with novelty of scene and duties, and most, if not all, the benefits of holiday? My lines are in pleasant places; the country is healthy, rural, and sylvan; there is a great nobleman's mansion and park, and a venerable abbey, both worthy of more than one visit.

I commend this proposal to the many pleasant fellows I have met at local branch and annual meetings, and I invite one of them to visit me from home, and believe that two of us may thus promote the enjoyment of our enforced leisure at very little expense.—I remain, sir, yours, J. W.

NEW ZEALAND.

SIR.—Permit me to inquire, through the medium of your columns, where the best information can be obtained with reference to New Zealand as a place of residence and a field for professional venture. If any of your readers will kindly communicate to me, direct, any particulars that may be in their power to give, I shall be extremely obliged to them.—Yours faithfully,

CAROLUS.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisements for insertion in the BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL, should be forwarded direct to the Publishing Office, 36, Great Queen Street, W.C., addressed to Mr. FOWKE, not later than Thursday, Twelve o'clock.

DRINK-CRAVING.

SIR.—I have a pertinacious case of drink-craving in a man of good social position. He has long since entered the dodging lie-telling and crying stage, and now talks of self-destruction, has indefinable fears, and is restless. Will asylums take such cases? and is it regular to send such a case as this to an asylum? or is there a place where the patient can of his own accord place himself under restraint for a time?—I am, etc.,

RURAL.

CLITORIDECTOMY.

SIR.—The case related by "The Examiner" in your last issue does not appear to be one of excessive masturbation, for which clitoridectomy has been practised with more or less success by Leveret, Dubois, Baker Brown, and others. The girl in question, whether she be suffering from nymphomania or not, is undoubtedly morally insane, and should be placed under restraint. Sexual desire is closely interwoven with ovarian excitement; and though it may be produced at pleasure by irritation of the peripheral end of the pudic nerve, it by no means follows that removal of the clitoris would take away the inordinate lust indication of an unhealthy brain or spinal cord.

In this particular instance, there can be little doubt, from the data, that the nerve-centres are more at fault than the peripheral extremity of that branch of the pudic nerve which supplies sensibility to the clitoris, and clitoridectomy is not indicated.—Yours, etc.,

PERCY BOULTON, M.D., etc., Physician to the Samaritan Hospital for Women.

SIR.—I would venture to suggest to "Examiner", that if he made a close examination of the vulva and vagina in the case he refers to (in the JOURNAL of the 10th instant), he would in all probability discover a number of minute ulcers or vesicles on the mucous membrane of those parts, and that on applying a thirty-grain solution of nitrate of silver for a few days, he would very probably restore the woman to modesty and sanity. I make the suggestion, as a similar case occurred in the practice of a friend of mine.—Yours, etc.,

WILLIAM DONOVAN.
