

"On the authority of a respected clerical friend, I also state the following facts, which he can personally verify, and which occurred in a parish where he at one time held the cure.—

"A female relative (either a sister or aunt) of A. B., had a child with a supernumerary finger or toe on each extremity. A. B. married, he had eight children, two of whom had six fingers or toes on each extremity. A young woman in the neighbourhood accused A. B. of being the father of a child with which she was pregnant; but this he strenuously denied. The woman brought forth twins, and each had six fingers on each hand, and six toes on each foot,—certainly a remarkable coincidence, if the woman's accusation was false; but more probably a strong presumptive proof of the paternity of the offspring. I may add an instructive medico-legal fact, which occurred in the same locality, and which I state on the same authority. A theft was committed, and the authorities, while investigating the matter, detected the impression of a foot on the soil; it presented the appearance of six toes, and was traced to the son of A. B. without any difficulty." [Edinburgh Monthly Journal, October 1851.]
