

The Record of Roboleine

is one of which we are justifiably proud, for it proves once and for all that an ethical product which has received the approbation of the medical profession must of necessity be more and more sought after as the news of its efficacy spreads.

Granted that the sale of 'Roboleine' is a commercial proposition, there is also considerable satisfaction in the knowledge that we are supplying something which has been proved to do good, not only in hospitals and sanatoria, but also amongst hundreds of thousands of private patients.
