

THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

SIR,—May I be permitted to correct an error which appeared in your impression of the 25th inst., regarding the last general order No. 370, by the Bengal Government, with reference to the Indian Medical Service?

The leading article states that provision has been made "so that the medical officer in charge of a jail or hospital may be properly and comfortably placed." A reference to the general order itself will show that this is a mistake, and that the "provision" which is represented in your columns as having been effected, is in fact, the only one upon which the intentions of Government are undebated, and which is still deferred sine die.

The medical officer of a jail is invariably a civil surgeon, and in the majority of instances he is also the administrative officer with magisterial powers. The general order states that charges of jails, lunatic asylums, etc., "will be fixed in the Civil Department," and thus the position of civil surgeons is still under consideration, a disgraceful testimony to the inefficiency of official warrants. In 1864, Sir Charles Wood, No. 1060, directed this matter to be settled as soon as possible. Three years have nearly passed, and a new general order has appeared, leaving the case untouched. It has been represented before in your columns, that under existing circumstances a civil surgeoncy is in most cases a loss, and that the retention of the same by medical officers is attributable solely to their love of their profession. Is this to be the reason for prolonged injustice, and is it a policy calculated to produce contentment, and increased efficiency in the service? I leave the question to be answered by others; meanwhile I would respectfully suggest to Sir Stafford Northcote, that, if he has honourable and just intentions towards the Indian medical department, it would be well for him to issue definite instructions, which a subordinate government dare not disobey. Officers would then know their real position and expectations, and would be free, either to retain, or resign, their civil charges, and be released from suspense, while the Secretary of State for India would have the pleasure to see that his orders from the India Office are not stultified by unjustifiable delays and opposite opinions.

I beg to subscribe myself,

A MEMBER OF A DEGRADED SERVICE.

MEDICAL OPINIONS.

"I have now given your Syrup of Orange and Quinine a fair trial, and it has not only answered admirably, but has been much liked in the cases in which I have prescribed it. I congratulate you on having presented to the profession so very elegant and useful a preparation."—ROBERT MARTIN, Esq., M.D., Physician to the Warrington Dispensary.

"The Orange Quinine Syrup is an agreeable preparation. I have used it, and find it free from alcohol. It is, altogether, an elegant vehicle for the administration of Quinine, and deserves an extensive patronage."—HARVEY MURDO, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., author of The Physiological Action of Alcohol, etc., etc.

Sold in Bottles, half-pints, 1s. 3d.; pints, 3s. Orders for one dozen half-pints, or half dozen pints, forwarded carriage free to any Railway Station in the Kingdom.

MEDICAL OPINIONS.

"I have subjected Beckett's Syrup of Orange and Quinine to a fair trial in cases such as are usually benefited by Quinine, and have no hesitation in saying that it is the best form and preparation of Quinine I have yet used. It is a preparation deserving of a wide and general adoption."—J. W. BEAUMONT, Esq., M.D., L.R.C.P. Edin., etc.

"I have taken several doses of your new Syrup of Orange and Quinine. It is a nice preparation, free from any sort of objection, and will accomplish every purpose of Quinine as a tonic. I hope it will come into general use in place of the Quinine Wine now so much sold."—JAMES EDMUNDS, Esq., M.D., Lecturer on Medical Science to the Female Medical Society.

He has been granted a Gold Medal by the London Dispensary.

ENTERED AT STATIONERS' HALL.

As a substitute for Orange Quinine Wine this preparation is not only more palatable but is in every respect far superior. Each fluid ounce of the Syrup guaranteed to contain two grains of Howard's Quinine.
