The GAS INDUSTRY is helping the MEDICAL PROFESSION

One of the greatest medical developments of the century has been the discovery of the bacteria-killing properties of coal-tar. As a result, the medical profession has at its service a new group of drugs, the sulphonamides, which have effected many dramatic cures. And this is only the beginning. We do not yet know what other new weapons against disease coal-tar may give us.

While it might be an exaggeration to say that drugs such as these would never have existed but for the Gas Industry, it is certain that the making of gas accelerated their discovery. For coal-tar is one of the largest by-products of gas-making; and the modern development of the Gas Industry's by-product activities has afforded greater opportunities for research in this field.

The by-products of gas-making are also the source of many other substances. Such medical necessities as anæsthetics, antiseptics, salicylic acid, liquefied ice crystals for surgical work, naphthalene for preserving biological specimens, and simple everyday remedies like aspirin and ephedrine owe their origin to the gasworks. Synthetic Vitamins B₁ and K are now being produced from the organic chemicals extracted from coal in the process of gas-making.

In these ways, then, as well as the more obvious one of providing smokeless fuels — gas and coke — the Gas Industry is rendering service to human health.

BLOOD COLLECTION as a practical test of the ANTI-STAPHYLOCOCCAL POWER of antiseptics

When blood is collected for transfusion — particularly if it is to be stored for a time — the paramount importance of avoiding skin contamination is plain. Yet the collecting needle must pass through skin known to harbour micro-organisms in large numbers and the difficulty of rendering the skin sterile is an urgent and acute problem. The collection of blood and its subsequent culture can, therefore, be made a practical test of the value of an antiseptic in skin sterilisation. The following table sets out the comparative results obtained, using various procedures in parallel for the pre-operative treatment of the skin at the bend of the elbow of blood donors.

PROCEDURE: { Category: BACTERIOLOGICAL

Comment on results obtained

Of the various procedures employed, only one yielded completely satisfactory results over a series of 50 tests — namely, O-syl Antiseptic in 5 per cent. aqueous solution. The failure of other methods is marked unless spirit is added to the antiseptic solution, thus suggesting that the results obtained by these methods are due rather to the spirit content than to the antiseptic.

The dominant factor — STAPHYLOCOCCI

Of the many micro-organisms found on and in the human skin, streptococci and staphylococci take pride of place. In fact, in the tests reported here, staphylococci proved to be the principal organism grown in 50 of the 56 cases (i.e. 89 per cent. of the positive cultures obtained) in which sterilisation of the skin appeared defective. As already reported in this journal, O-syl has been proved to be highly effective against staphylococci and it is undoubtedly this fact which leads to the results reported here. The failure of other procedures to give the desired result is due largely to their inability to kill staphylococci on and in the human skin.

VITAMIN THERAPY IN POST-NATAL DEBILITY

The period which follows childbirth calls for special care. After the drain upon the mother's strength, her new-found responsibilities frequently weigh heavily upon her and there is a tendency to "nerves" accompanied by lowered resistance to infection.

In addition to a diet liberal in energy-giving elements, a course of intensive vitamin therapy is indicated.

Pregnavite Tablets provide vitamins A, B₁, C and D with calcium, phosphorus and available iron in amounts and proportions designed to meet the exacting demands of pregnancy and lactation. When taken throughout the expectant and nursing periods they ensure that the diet is adequate in these essential nutritional factors.

As a post-natal supplement, Pregnavite Tablets should go far to restore the mother's reserves.

PREGNAVITE

in recommended doses supplies, at time of manufacture, approximately:—

Vitamin A	4,000 i.u.	Calcium	350 mg.
Vitamin B ₁	200 i.u.	Phosphorus	550 mg.
Vitamin C	400 i.u.	Available Iron	12 mg.
Vitamin D	300 i.u.

THE SHADOW AND THE SUBSTANCE

In Pyelography

'Pyelectan' and 'Pyelosil' provide the two standard preparations for excretion pyelography. Used according to individual preference, they give equally good pyelograms, and each has its own advocates. Some radiologists employ 'Pyelosil' because it can be given subcutaneously as well as intravenously; others, knowing that it is contra-indicated in subjects with a history of allergy, prefer to use 'Pyelectan.'

'Pyelectan' Retrograde is designed for instrumental pyelography which, as well as being frequently complementary to excre-tion pyelography, may have to replace that method when injection of any contrast medium is contra-indicated.

In Cholecystography

Pheniodol (Glaxo) is a new contrast medium for radiography of the gall-bladder. Given orally, Pheniodol (Glaxo) will provide more consistently good results than has been possible hitherto because in adverse circumstances it is more readily absorbed from the alimentary tract.

Pheniodol Granules (Glaxo) present the substance in its most acceptable form for oral administration.

The Vitamin B Complex as a whole

In many instances it seems preferable to administer the vitamin B complex as a whole rather than in the form of individual components. Marmite is particularly useful in these cases, given either alone or in conjunction with other treatment according to the needs of the patient.

A natural product may provide some essential constituents as yet unidentified; also there is the possibility of a synergistic action when a number of allied vitamin factors are presented together, as in Marmite.

Milk Sensitivity

It is tragic that in a number of the allergic conditions in infancy one has hitherto been compelled to omit milk altogether from the diet. The entire omission of milk—an infant's natural food—is extremely difficult on account of its high food value, particularly with reference to its calcium and phosphorus content. The substitution of "synthetic milks" is unsatisfactory, and infants generally refuse them.

Allergilac now solves the problem by altering the essential milk in such a way that the allergy producing principles are no longer effective.

In Allergilac the greater part of the offending lactalbumen has been removed, the casein has been denaturised and the milk acidified with lactic acid.
