towards CONTROL of the COMMON COLD

While the primary infecting agent in the common cold remains a subject for continued research, enough is known about the secondary invaders to produce a useful vaccine for prophylaxis and treatment.

Inoculation with Cold Dissolved Vaccine Glaxo releases the antigens of a variety of these secondary organisms and can therefore do much to prevent or lessen the disabling symptoms of the cold's acute phase. The antigens are in solution and immediately available to stimulate antibody production. For immunisation, three injections of Cold Dissolved Vaccine Glaxo at weekly intervals may suffice for the entire winter. For treatment, the course can be condensed into two or three days without risk of undue reaction.

MULTITONE ELECTRONIC PHYSIOTHERAPY APPARATUS

The MULTISURGER is a two-valve portable Faradic unit generating unidirectional pulses which are automatically de-ionised.

The output can be continuous or surged at five predetermined rates selected by a switch, the output voltage is controlled by a potentiometer.

The absence of skin sensation, lack of moving parts, small size, light weight and robust construction make this the ideal instrument for use in Departments of Physical Medicine.

The output of this apparatus has a degree of comfort which is believed to be unobtainable except by electronic means.

The ratio of surge to rest period remains constant at all rates of surge and the relaxation period is of sufficient duration to reduce muscle fatigue to a minimum.
