Protein in Gastric Disturbances

PATHOLOGICAL lesions of the gastro-intestinal tract create special problems of management from the nutritional aspect. The problem is by no means eased by the fact that the body's protein requirements are increased rather than lessened by reason of the need for amino acids, which are required in the process of tissue repair. Failure to provide protein supplement in the diet can only mean that the body will have to obtain the required amino acids by raiding tissue proteins, which of course can only result in loss of weight.

The physician frequently has recourse to a non-residue diet in the management of gastric or duodenal ulcer and also in the re-establishment of a normal diet after infective enteritis or amoebic dysentery.

Difficulties of digestion, accompanied by pain, poor absorption and indifferent appetite, create a vicious circle which demands a special effort to break. This effort is sometimes provided by a protein supplement which can be easily broken down by the digestive processes and completely absorbed.

The particular advantages of Brand's Essence under such conditions are:—

1. It is soluble animal protein of high biological value.
2. Being partly hydrolysed, it is capable of easy ingestion, digestion and absorption.
3. It promotes gastric secretion.
4. It is extremely palatable.
5. It may be taken as a jelly or a liquid.
