Just published

Many medical journals, including the British Medical Journal, now expect scientific papers submitted to them to contain confidence intervals when appropriate. Why? what are they? and how do you calculate them? Statistics with Confidence tells you. A clear explanation of the reasons for using confidence intervals is followed by detailed presentation of methods of calculation, including numerous worked examples and specially compiled tables. To make things even easier, a computer programme, Confidence Interval Analysis (CIA), for calculating confidence intervals, has been specially designed by Martin Gardner and details are available from the Publishing Department, British Medical Journal.

The BMJ's series of books of general interest by medical writers

To readers of the BMJ Douglas (Dougal) Swinscow is probably best known as its former deputy editor and author of one of its most popular books, Statistics at Square One. But he is also a world authority on lichens, and his first work to appear in print was a poem, published by T S Eliot in the New English Weekly. A lover of the arts and a painstaking scientist, a philosopher who nevertheless thrived in a military role and went through one of the bloodiest battles of the second world war (at Arnhem), Douglas Swinscow looks back at the contrasting forces that have shaped his life and at the personal choices that have gone into the making of his character.

Essays to honour Ian Munro

Is the Lancet the most famous medical journal in the world?

It is certainly the most frequently cited, its mixture of high science, common sense, mild subversion, and humour giving it a loyal following throughout the world. Much of this is due to the character of its editor, Ian Munro.

Taken on to the editorial staff because his epistolary style impressed the then editor, Sir Theodore Fox, Munro became the longest serving medical staff member of a medical journal.

He has recently retired, and to mark the occasion friends and colleagues at home and abroad have produced a literary substitute for the traditional carriage clock. In it they pay tribute to Munro's qualities as editor, cricketer, liberal campaigner, and soother of hurt authors' feelings.

Contributors include the editors of the Norwegian Medical Journal, the New Zealand Medical Journal, and the BMJ as well as the deputy editors of the Lancet. You don't have to be Ian Munro to read and enjoy this book: a limited edition of 100 copies is now published by the Keynes Press.

Designed and printed by Sebastian Carter at the Rampart Lions Press, Cambridge, on Zerkall laid mould made paper. The text is set in Monotype Perpetua by Monoset Ltd, and the displayed matter in Golden Cockerel roman, both designed by Eric Gill. Thread sewn in a soft cover.

48 pages + 5 pages of plates.
