EDITOR'S CHOICE

BMJ

A contentious week this: David Morley and Derek Worlock battle it out about the role of the Roman Catholic church in poverty and AIDS (p 1705), while Bernard Dixon resents the intrusion of legal considerations into the formerly open cooperative habits of scientists (p 1715) and two correspondents continue the debate about neutron therapy with criticisms of an American trial in prostate cancer

(p 1721). Equally trenchant—this time in defence of the NHS and patient care—is John Marks, the BMA's outgoing chairman of council, in his opening address to this year's annual representative meeting in Bournemouth (p 1727). Jim Drife, however, provides some relief from all this anger in his revelations of what busy doctors who discard their junk mail unopened have been missing (p 1731).
